Samsung¹ objects to a Special Master's order granting Rambus' motion to compel Samsung to produce documents relating to Samsung's destruction of documents in Mosaid Technologies, Inc. v. Samsung Electronics Co., Ltd., Case No. 01-CV-4340 (D.N.J.). Rambus opposes the objection. The court has reviewed the papers and considered the arguments of counsel heard on November 7, 2007. The court overrules Samsung's objections to the Mosaid production. Samsung is ordered to produce everything from Mosaid Technologies, Inc. v. Samsung Electronics Co., Ltd., Case No. 01-CV-4340 (D.N.J.) that specifically, or in part specifically, addresses the destruction or spoliation of evidence.² The court envisions that this production will comprise court filings, discovery productions, hearing transcripts and deposition transcripts, but it is not limited to particular classes of documents. To be clear, Samsung does not have to produce everything from the Mosaid litigation. This order is limited to those things that specifically, or in part specifically, address the destruction or spoliation of evidence.

DATED: 11/13/07

RONALD M. WHYTE United States District Judge

Kmald M. Whyte

[&]quot;Samsung" collectively refers to all of the Samsung entities sued in these cases, namely Samsung Electronics Co., Ltd., Samsung Electronics America, Inc., Samsung Semiconductor, Inc., and Samsung Austin Semiconductor, L.P.

The court believes this reflects the scope of Judge Ambler's order. To the extent Judge Ambler's order could be construed as broader than this formulation, the order is modified to conform to these limits.
